INTRODUCTION

Welcome to the Draft Sharks Rookie Prospect Guide. This is the Pre-Draft Version.

Over the past few months, we've spent hundreds of hours watching and studying the 2026 draft class. You'll find deep dives on 50 top prospects in this version of the guide (with more to come).

Why? We want to give you an edge in both your dynasty rookie drafts and redraft leagues.

What can you expect from this rookie guide?

- Top-50 Rankings (1-QB and Superflex)
- Positional Rankings
- Player Profiles
- College Stats
- Combine Results
- Player Comps
- Projected Fantasy Values (Redraft and Dynasty)

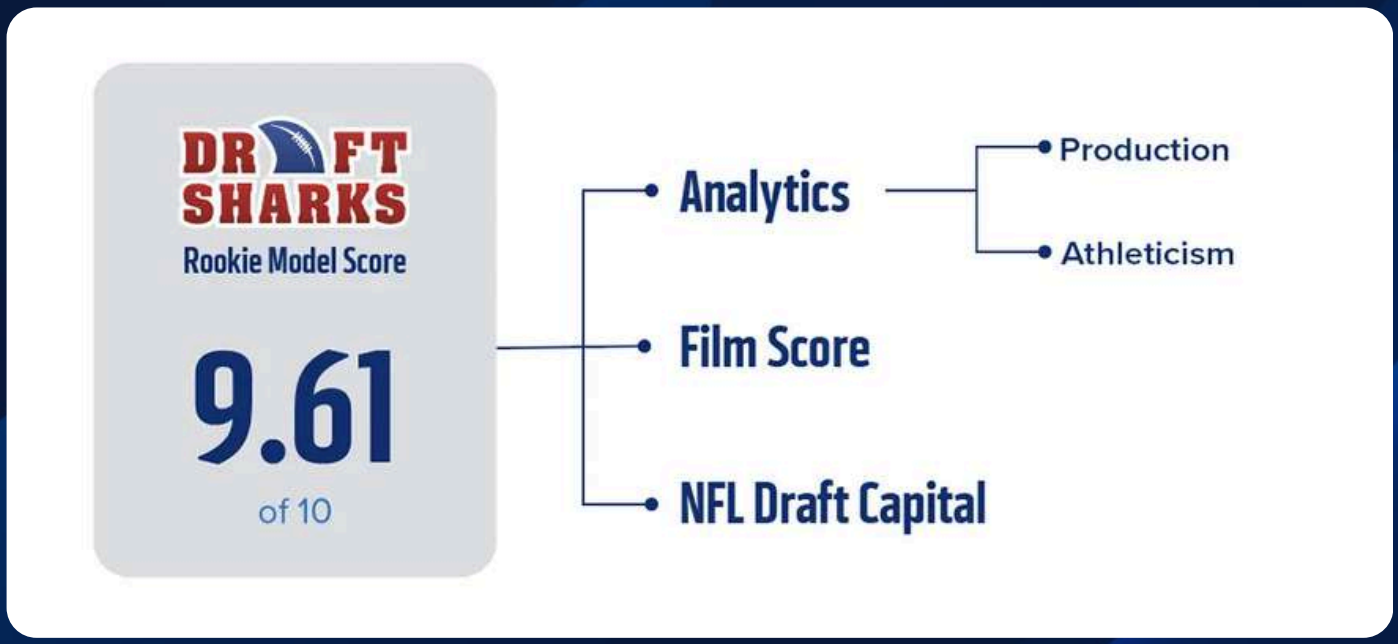

METHODOLOGY

A blend of art and science. We like to watch rookie film and attack each player's analytical profile. It's a team effort here with countless hours of analysis going into this guide.

Draft Sharks Rookie Model

The Draft Sharks Rookie Model offers a comprehensive evaluation method blending analytics, film review, and draft capital to identify top targets.

This approach considers a player's college production, athleticism, and expert film grades to predict NFL success. The model adjusts for team-specific contexts and levels of competition, aiming to pinpoint rookies with significant upside or potential red flags.

2025	16	72.0	3535	9.3	41-6	76	377	7

Player comp: Eli Manning

PROS

- Quick release
- Pinpoint accuracy
- Anticipates open WRs

CONS

- Mediocre arm strength
- Average mobility
- Reliant on RPOs

Player Overview

Mendoza flashed NFL potential at Cal but reached another level after transferring to Indiana in 2025. He won the Heisman and a national championship, throwing for 3,535 yards with 41 TDs and 6 INTs, and adding 276 rushing yards and 7 TDs.

Accuracy headlines his skill set. He anticipates coverage and throws receivers open, making him dangerous against any defense. Above-average pocket movement and footwork support his franchise QB upside.

Mendoza's arm strength does not match recent top prospects such as Caleb Williams, but toughness and situation make him a top-2 rookie pick in superflex drafts. He should start quickly if he goes to the Raiders.

Player comp: Mac Jones

PROS

- Smooth footwork
- Consistent release
- Navigates pocket well

CONS

- Inexperienced
- Underwhelming arm
- Inconsistent coverage recognition

Player Overview

Simpson finally started for Alabama in 2025 after sitting behind Jalen Milroe for two seasons. The results were mixed.

Simpson has only 15 college starts. First-round QBs with 15 or fewer starts over the past 10 years include:

- Anthony Richardson
- Mitchell Trubisky
- Dwayne Haskins

That's concerning. Simpson did flash NFL-caliber traits while throwing for 3,567 yards, 28 TDs, and 5 INTs. His father has coached Tennessee-Martin for 20 years.

Simpson shows first-round mechanics, a smooth delivery, and class-best footwork. But average arm strength and limited experience hurt his early upside.

Player comp: Breece Hall

PROS

- Excellent speed
- Powerful through contact
- Upside receiver

CONS

- Inconsistent vision

Player Overview

Love enters the draft as the most complete RB prospect in this class.

He compiled 2,497 rushing yards and 35 TDs over the past two seasons, displaying an elite combination of burst, contact balance, and long speed.

Love's final season confirmed he could handle more responsibility without sacrificing efficiency. He ranked near the top of the nation in yards per carry, yards after contact, and breakaway runs while also contributing meaningfully as a receiver (27 catches for 280 yards).

Love is our 1.01 in both 1-QB and superflex rookie drafts. His projected top-15 NFL Draft capital makes him an immediate candidate for RB1 production.

Player comp: DeAngelo Williams

PROS

- Decisive runner
- Quick acceleration
- Built for goal-line work

CONS

- Small college sample
- Ball security
- 2022 Achilles tear

Player Overview

Price never handled a feature workload while playing with Jeremiyah Love. But he squeezed maximum value out of limited touches over the past two seasons.

After rebounding from a ruptured Achilles in 2022, he showed consistent burst, power, and efficiency. That produced 6.0 career yards per carry and 10.8 per catch (albeit on only 15 career receptions).

The Athletic's Dane Brugler went so far as to say Price may have generated Heisman buzz had he transferred out of Notre Dame in 2025. Instead, Price hits the NFL with limited wear on his body.

We'll see about the landing spot, but Price is widely expected to come off the board in Round 2.

Player comp: Kareem Hunt

PROS

- Decisive cuts
- Rarely makes mistakes
- Ball security

CONS

- Lacks explosion
- Won't break many tackles
- 2025 knee injury

Player Overview

Coleman's dynasty appeal isn't tied to one spike season. It's rooted in three years of steady production, physical running, and usable pass-game skills.

He carved out a role early at Arizona before following HC Jedd Fisch to Washington and immediately claiming the No. 1 job. Coleman handled nearly two-thirds of the team's carries in 2024. And that workload came with elite contact balance and strong yards-after-contact numbers -- despite poor run blocking.

A knee injury impacted his final season, but Coleman still finished with career highs in receptions and yards per route.

With a 220-pound frame and experience in a pro-style system, Coleman projects as a Day 2 pick who can contribute early.

Player comp: Tyjae Spears

PROS

- Elite vision
- No wasted movement
- Proven receiver with YAC talent

CONS

- Won't 'wow' with power
- Senior-year breakout

Player Overview

Johnson's college path wasn't linear. He arrived as an overlooked recruit, redshirted, and then climbed past veteran competition before losing touches in 2024.

Even in a split backfield, his receiving stood out, culminating in a 39-catch season that foreshadowed a larger role. When Nebraska committed fully in 2025, Johnson responded with 1,451 rushing yards and a class-high 46 receptions.

The efficiency mostly held up under volume, with Johnson ranking top-15 in yards per carry, PFF rushing grade, and elusive rating among high-usage backs.

His lack of power shows up in yards after contact, but his vision, route running, and after-catch ability give him multiple paths to fantasy relevance.

Player comp: Trey Benson

PROS

- Workhorse size
- Strong through contact
- Long speed

CONS

- Ball security
- Poor change of direction
- Older prospect

Player Overview

Washington spent three seasons at Buffalo before making one-year stops at New Mexico State and Arkansas. He didn't truly level up until this past fall in Fayetteville.

The 6'1, 223-pounder ripped off 6.4 yards per rush and set career highs in carries (167), yards (1,070), and receptions (28).

He also posted a sturdy 3.86 yards after contact per attempt, per PFF.

Washington shows NFL burst and enough receiving polish to stay on the field in passing situations. That showed up again at the Senior Bowl, where he looked like the most complete back. Then he shredded the Combine.

Given that trajectory, Washington looks increasingly like a Day 2 candidate.

Player comp: Rico Dowdle

PROS

- Compact with power
- Great vision
- Ball security

CONS

- Not a big-play threat
- Slow to line of scrimmage
- Subpar receiver

Player Overview

Allen brings one of the most well-rounded profiles in this RB class.

The four-year contributor rushed for 867 yards and 10 TDs as a freshman. Over his final two seasons, Allen piled up 2,411 yards and 23 TDs on 430 carries, out-producing teammate Nick Singleton.

Allen finished as Penn State's all-time leading rusher with 4,180 yards.

At 5'11, 220 pounds, the Norfolk native owns an NFL-ready frame. He wins with patience, vision, and contact balance rather than burst. Allen's not overly dynamic but is reliable and tough, traits that could earn him goal-line work.

Landing in Round 3 would mark positive draft capital for Allen's outlook.

Player comp: Miles Sanders

PROS

- Super athlete
- Elite speed
- Receiving threat

CONS

- Poor vision
- Tackled easily
- Raw instincts

Player Overview

If you're seeking the draft's most athletic RB, here he is.

Singleton brings rare straight-line speed for his size and a slashing style. He's also one of the top pass-catching backs.

Penn State never unleashed him as a true workhorse, but he did play alongside four-star recruit Kaytron Allen.

The duo split carries near-evenly across 2022-23 before Allen led 15.3 to 10.9 over the past two seasons. That's concerning for Singleton's usage projection.

Singleton struggles with his vision on tape. And he's not the most creative runner when space condenses. But his rare athleticism and receiving ability give him a shot at sustainable dynasty value.

Player comp: Antonio Gibson

PROS

- Goal-line frame
- Strong through contact
- Converted receiver

CONS

- One-year producer
- Vision needs refining
- Mediocre burst

Player Overview

Randall played WR until 2024 but switched to full-time RB late that season.

In 2025, he led Clemson with 814 rushing yards and 10 TDs, commanding a 65.1% carry share and earning clear trust from the coaching staff.

At 6'2, 235 pounds, Randall brings rare size for a converted receiver. That background shows up in the passing game, where he snagged 36 passes for 254 yards.

He's still developing the finer points of the position, but his combination of size and receiving ability makes him one of the more intriguing upside bets in this class. He could go early on Day 3.

2025	11	130	504	3.9	19	109	5.7	3

Player comp: Isaiah Davis

PROS

- Breaks tackles
- Falls forward
- Sharp cuts

CONS

- Average athlete
- Won't hit homerun
- Limited receiving

Player Overview

If you prioritize production, Miller certainly won't fire you up.

Despite leading Alabama in rushing each of the past two seasons, he averaged just 48.8 yards per game in that span. Efficiency never spiked either, with 4.6 yards per carry as a junior and 3.9 as a senior.

That's underwhelming output for a top-5 RB recruit in the 2022 class, per 247Sports.

The tape tells a slightly better story. Miller flashes plus contact balance and runs hard between the tackles.

Just be aware: The passing game likely remains secondary after 35 catches and five drops over his final two seasons.

Player comp: Jamaal Williams

PROS

- Physical and tough
- Low pad level
- Above average receiver

CONS

- Questionable play speed
- Sloppy cuts
- Character concerns (2021 arrest)

Player Overview

McGowan began his career at Oklahoma in 2022. Robbery and battery charges derailed his path, though.

“It was difficult. At some point, I was facing like 70 years,” he admitted in comments made to Kentucky Sports Radio.

He resurfaced at Butler Community College in 2023 before jumping to New Mexico State in 2024. There, he out-produced fellow prospect Mike Washington Jr. 5.4 yards per carry to 4.6.

McGowan’s 2025 slipped, however, as he mustered only 4.4 YPC at Kentucky.

We like his burst and contact balance, but he’s unlikely to become a major factor in the passing game. McGowan projects as a Day 3 draft pick.

2025	12	179	907	5.1	28	140	5.0	10

Player comp: Jerome Ford

PROS

- Elite speed
- Dynamic moving laterally
- Reliable pass catcher

CONS

- Undersized
- Will struggle in pass pro
- Ball security

Player Overview

Claiborne spent three years leading the Wake Forest backfield, stacking good production despite a middling offense. That included 1,956 rushing yards, 21 TDs, and 51 receptions over his final two years.

He even squeezed out a career-best 5.1 yards per carry in 2025 after suffering a rib injury in the opener.

Claiborne brings legit juice. His 42.5% breakaway rate, per Pro Football Focus, underscores how often he delivered runs of 15+ yards. The burst and lateral agility pop, especially when he bounces outside.

The concerns are clear, though. His frame likely caps him as a complementary piece, and five fumbles in 2025 highlight ball-security risk that NFL coaches won't ignore.

Player comp: Jeff Wilson

PROS

- Quick feet
- NFL-caliber size & strength
- Decisive style

CONS

- Inconsistent pass pro
- Too many drops
- Durability concerns

Player Overview

Moss' 2024 season drives his draft case. He posted 6.3 yards per carry, scored 10 times, and churned out 4.4 yards after contact per attempt, according to PFF. That's high-end production in the SEC.

Then the injuries hit. A knee injury wiped out his final four games in 2024. And an ankle injury the next August restricted him to just 77 carries. HC Mike Elko publicly backed him after the 2025 injury, calling him a "warrior."

Despite the limited sample, a matchup vs. Auburn showed Moss' upside. He delivered 132 yards and a score, flashing twitchy feet and tackle-breaking strength.

Those traits give him a path to a pro role, but teams will need to weigh them against his uneven sample and durability woes.

Player comp: Ray Davis

PROS

- Strong contact balance
- Patient runner
- Accomplished receiver

CONS

- Lacks ideal size
- Average athlete
- Late breakout

Player Overview

It took four seasons at North Carolina Central for Taylor to seize a lead role, but he delivered once he got there. His 2024 campaign produced 1,146 yards and 15 TDs on 196 attempts, including 700 yards after contact, per PFF.

That blend of power and persistence translated well after his transfer to Virginia. In a zone-heavy system, Taylor topped 1,000 rushing yards again, despite just 4.8 yards per carry. That included three 100-yard efforts across his final five games. Add in 43 receptions, and the resume looks solid.

Taylor lacks eye-popping traits, but his vision and balance consistently generate chain-moving production. Late Day 3 draft capital looks likely.

PROS

- Explosive

- Proven receiver

CONS

- Tight & upright
- Inconsistent cutting
- Older prospect

Player Overview

Hemby opened his career at Maryland and hit his statistical peak as a sophomore, rushing 188 times for 989 yards and 10 TDs. He caught 33 passes that year, the first of three straight seasons with 30+ receptions.

His receiving output dipped to 17 grabs for 165 yards at Indiana in 2025. But he paired with Kaelon Black to form one of the nation's best backfield tandems. Hemby tallied career highs in carries (230) and rushing yards (1,120).

At 210 pounds, he runs with vision and urgency and offers usable pass-game skills. The concerns: limited elusiveness and heavy mileage.

He'll enter the league as a 24-year-old rookie with 840 career touches.

Player comp: CeeDee Lamb

PROS

- Explosive & quick
- Excellent hands
- Elite ball tracking

CONS

- Gets pushed around
- Rounds some routes
- Questionable deep speed

Player Overview

Lemon looks like one of the safest prospects in the draft. The film, production, and metrics all suggest he is an NFL-ready receiver with early-impact potential.

The 2025 season erased any remaining doubt. Lemon earned unanimous first-team All-America honors and claimed the Biletnikoff Award as the top FBS receiver after leading all Power Four WRs with 1,156 regular-season yards.

Lemon projects as a high-volume slot weapon at the next level after running 76% of his routes from that position at USC. He wins with precise routes, elite hands, and advanced coverage awareness rather than size.

He should be one of the top WRs taken in rookie drafts.

Player comp: George Pickens

PROS

- Insane ball skills
- Contested specialist
- Separates against weaker DBs

CONS

- Succumbs to press
- Plays upright
- Inconsistent spacing vs. zone

Player Overview

Tate showcased elite hands in 2025, finishing with zero drops and leading the class in contested-catch success: 12 catches among 14 targets.

Tate finished his junior season with 51 catches for 875 yards and 9 TDs. Pro Football Focus graded him as the No. 5 FBS WR. He averaged 3.02 yards per route run and 17.2 yards per catch, showing the ability to stretch coverage vertically.

Tate wins with explosive ball skills, physicality at the catch point, and refined route work. He ran 86.8% of his routes on the outside and projects cleanly as an outside NFL receiver.

In dynasty formats, Tate profiles as a fringe WR2 in startups and top-5 pick in rookie drafts.

Player comp: Roddy White

PROS

- Separates easily
- Tracks ball well
- Elite after the catch

CONS

- Inconsistent footwork
- Drops
- Lengthy injury history

Player Overview

The lone red flag on Tyson's profile is durability. He missed roughly 34% of his college career with a multi-ligament knee injury, a broken collarbone, hamstring issues, and a Lisfranc injury. That history presents downside risk.

When healthy, though, Tyson looked like a potential No. 1 WR. He brings NFL size at 6'2, 203 pounds, wins with sharp route running, creates separation at all levels, and offers the versatility teams covet.

Tyson is widely viewed as a first-round talent and has the physical tools to be the best WR in the class.

Tyson carries a wider range of outcomes than Makai Lemon or Carnell Tate. But there's clear WR1 fantasy upside here.

PROS

- Massive frame

CONS

- Struggles vs. top DBs
- Wastes movement on cuts
- Inconsistent separation

Player Overview

Boston took a longer path to relevance.

A three-star recruit out of Emerald Ridge High School in Tacoma, Boston stayed home at Washington. He spent his first two seasons buried behind Jalen McMillan, Rome Odunze, and Ja'Lynn Polk before stepping into the starting lineup as a junior. Once the opportunity arrived, the production followed.

Boston posted near-identical stat lines across his final two seasons:

- 63 catches, 834 yards, 9 TDs
- 62 catches, 881 yards, 11 TDs

NFL.com's Lance Zierlein compares him to Puka Nacua. Boston could come off the board early on Day 2 (and maybe reach Round 1) as a physical, chain-moving outside receiver.

PROS

CONS

- Struggles when contested

Player Overview

Concepcion's profile took a meaningful step forward in 2025. After two productive seasons as N.C. State's primary slot receiver, he transferred to Texas A&M and showed his game could scale outside.

Concepcion led the Aggies in all major receiving categories, finishing with 61 catches for 919 yards and 10 total scores. He earned consensus All-America honors as an all-purpose threat.

Concepcion's burst, run-after-catch ability, and alignment flexibility fit today's offenses. League sources have already floated first-round draft buzz.

He sits in the second tier of rookie WRs. Concepcion carries mid-first-round appeal for rookie drafts and WR3 value in startup drafts, with room to climb.

PROS

- Sharp route footwork
- Breaks off routes quickly
- Outstanding body control

CONS

- Slow off the line

- Short-arms passes

Player Overview

A four-star recruit out of Indianapolis, Cooper turned potential into production in 2024. He caught 28 passes for 594 yards and 7 TDs while leading the Big Ten in yards per reception at 21.2.

Cooper led the 2025 Hoosiers with 69 receptions, 937 yards, and 13 TDs. He shifted into the slot after spending the previous two seasons primarily outside.

At 6'0 and 200 pounds, Cooper brings solid size, reliable hands, and strong ball skills. He can align across the formation, has the toughness to work the middle, and sports the burst to threaten vertically.

A solid Combine performance has him looking like a top-50 pick in the NFL Draft.

Player comp: Kenny Britt

PROS

- Huge catch radius
- Wins hand fights
- Expansive route tree

CONS

- Slow off the line
- Focus drops
- December ACL tear

Player Overview

At 6'2 and 220 pounds, Bell looks the part of an NFL red-zone weapon. He brings size, strength, and enough long speed to stress defenses. An ACL tear on Nov. 22 clouds his draft outlook and kept him from participating in drills at the Combine.

Bell improved his production each year, capping his career with a 72-917-6 line.

Bell is built like a RB and plays like a power forward. He shields defenders, wins through contact, and consistently finishes at the catch point. Bell offers solid run-after-catch ability and flashes vertical juice. But he struggles to separate vs. press coverage and needs sharper route detail.

If he returns to pre-injury form, Bell's size and ball skills give him legitimate upside.

PROS

- Great leaping ability
- Back-shoulder specialist
- Tough across middle

CONS

- Rarely separates
- Average athlete
- Lacks upside

Player Overview

Sarratt followed FCS Freshman All-America honors in 2022 with a jump to James Madison. He ranked 11th nationally in receiving yards under Curt Cignetti and then followed his coach to Indiana.

Sarratt led the team with 53 catches, 957 yards, and 8 TDs in 2024 before leading the nation in receiving scores in his final season.

At 6'2 and 209 pounds, Sarratt wins with body control, strength, and timing. He consistently creates late separation, uses his frame to shield defenders, and high-points the football as well as anyone in this class. He is not a burner and will need a more diverse route tree, but his ball skills and red-zone dominance project cleanly.

Sarratt profiles as a reliable possession target with plus scoring upside in the NFL.

PROS

- Vertical threat
- Long-striding speed
- Beat top competition

CONS

- Raw route runner
- Gets tackled easily
- Too many drops

Player Overview

Brazzell is one of the purest vertical bets in the 2026 class. After a shoulder injury limited him to two games in 2022, he rebounded in 2023 before transferring to Tennessee. Brazzell led the SEC in regular-season receiving yards in 2025.

Brazzell brings uncommon length and a massive catch radius. He stacks corners vertically, tracks the ball naturally, and wins at the high point.

The concerns: Physical press coverage exposes his thin frame, and his route tree remains limited. He wins vertically but struggles to separate underneath.

Brazzell looks like a Day 2 NFL Draft pick and Round 2 option for dynasty rookie drafts.

Player Overview

Branch arrived as a blue-chip prospect. A five-star track and football standout from Las Vegas, he committed to USC in 2023 and made an early impact as a returner.

Branch transferred to Georgia for 2025. He broke out as the Bulldogs' most productive receiver, leading the team with 81 receptions and 811 receiving yards. Georgia manufactured much of that production via short throws.

At 5'9 and 177 pounds, Branch isn't built to win with size or physicality. His value comes from speed, agility, and short-area explosiveness. He profiles best as a slot receiver and returner.

Branch's offensive ceiling will depend on his landing spot and usage. He projects as a Day 2 pick.

PROS

- Maintains speed on breaks

- Tough to tackle

CONS

- Gets lost vs. zone
- Won't win vertically
- Loses positioning when contested

Player Overview

Bernard spent a quiet freshman year at Michigan State, a better sophomore year at Washington, and then blossomed at Alabama. He led the team in receptions two straight years after following coach Kalen DeBoer from Washington.

Bernard sports NFL size and alignment flexibility. He's a polished route runner who gets in and out of breaks with precision, making him especially effective on slants and digs. Alabama also leaned into his versatility, giving him 18 carries for 101 yards and 2 TDs in 2025. He forced 17 missed tackles, underscoring his run-after-catch ability.

Bernard lacks true top-end speed and converted just 12 of 31 contested targets in college. His draft capital could signal whether there's upside worth chasing.

Player Overview

Fields bet on himself after earning third-team All-ACC honors at Virginia in 2024, transferring to Notre Dame for his fifth season. The spotlight got brighter; the production didn't. His statistical decline raised questions about how much situation drove his earlier output.

The traits still demand attention. At 6'4 and 220 pounds, Fields looks the part of an NFL boundary receiver. He brings a wide catch radius, dependable hands in space, and better run-after-catch ability than most receivers his size. He's durable and comfortable working intermediate routes.

Fields enters the 2026 draft cycle as a polarizing projection. The frame is NFL-caliber, but the production profile lagged. A strong Senior Bowl helped steady the narrative.

Player Overview

Lane logged just 76 snaps as a true freshman. He broke out in 2024, though, ranking fifth nationally in TD catches. Lane punctuated that season with a 7-127-3 eruption in the Las Vegas Bowl.

A shoulder injury disrupted his 2025 , but the efficiency remained. Lane posted a career-best 4.8 yards after catch per reception and averaged 2.42 yards per route. He plays to his 6'4 size, using his frame to box out defenders and consistently win 50-50 balls.

Concentration drops pop up on tape, his top-end speed is average, and USC's offense didn't demand a full route tree.

As long as Lane lands on Day 2 of the NFL Draft, he'll likely be worth a Round 2 pick in rookie drafts.

Player Overview

Like his brother Trey, Lance starred at North Dakota State. He moved into the starting lineup in 2024 and immediately delivered. He posted back-to-back 1,000-yard seasons and earned first-team all-conference honors both years.

Lance brings ideal boundary size and vertical juice. He averaged 21.2 yards per catch in 2025 and posted an elite 3.57 yards per route run, one of the strongest efficiency marks in the class.

The tape matches the numbers. Lance wins downfield with body control, tracking ability, and finishing strength.

Competition level and age (25 in September) work against Lance and figure to hurt his draft capital. But he'd present upside from Round 3 on in rookie drafts.

Player Overview

After two seasons in a reserve role, Burks stepped into Purdue's starting lineup in 2023 and flashed with 7 TDs. He transferred to Oklahoma in search of a bigger platform, but injuries derailed his 2024, costing him eight games. He rebounded for a career-best 58 grabs in 2025.

At 5'10 and 180 pounds, Burks projects primarily as an NFL slot. He brings high-end speed and shows a strong feel for settling into soft spots against zone.

View Burks as a Round 3-4 rookie draft target. The profile suggests a role player, not a difference-maker.

Player comp: Greg Jennings

PROS

- Route technician
- Great angles after catch
- Consistent production

CONS

- Slows down on cuts
- Plays upright
- Durability concerns

Player Overview

Williams enters the 2026 draft as one of the more polished slot prospects in the class (93% slot rate in 2025).

A decorated South Carolina prep star, he broke out immediately at Clemson, leading the Tigers in catches (56) and yards (604) as a true freshman. Injuries derailed 2023 and shortened 2025. But when healthy in 2024, he delivered his biggest stat line.

Williams wins with route craft, tempo changes, and fearlessness over the middle. He can also be a productive runner on jet sweeps and a plus option in the return game. But at 5'11, 190, he's not built to dominate outside or win purely on size.

At bottom, Williams projects as a high-floor, medium-ceiling talent with slot value.

Player comp: Calvin Austin

PROS

- Elite speed
- Quick change of direction
- Sells vertical routes

CONS

- Very small
- Body catcher
- Bullied on line of scrimmage

Player Overview

The four-star football and track standout in high school ran quiet through three college seasons, despite a transfer. His second move -- to Mississippi State -- produced a breakthrough.

Thompson led the SEC in receiving yards last season, averaging 18.5 yards per catch. His 18.4 average depth of target ranked among the highest in the country.

At 5'9 and 164 pounds, Thompson wins with pure acceleration and deep-ball tracking, not size or physicality. The lack of sustained production and his thin frame highlight the downside risk.

Thompson is a Round 3 or 4 rookie draft target. Earning Day 2 NFL Draft capital would enhance his outlook by presenting potential opportunity.

Player Overview

Hurst spent two years at Division II Valdosta State before jumping to FBS-level Georgia State.

He set a school record for TD receptions in his first season while averaging 17.2 yards per catch. He followed that with a first-team all-conference season in 2025.

At 6'4 and 206 pounds, Hurst looks like an NFL boundary receiver. He pairs size and catch radius with vertical speed. His 34 receptions of 20+ yards across 2024-2025 led all FBS receivers.

The competition-level question is fair, but Hurst answered some of it with strong practice reps at the Senior Bowl.

Hurst will be an enticing Round 3 pick in dynasty rookie drafts.

Player Overview

Bell caught 69 passes for 756 yards and 6 TDs across three seasons at Wisconsin before transferring to UConn in 2024.

There, he became the program's first consensus first-team All-American in 2025. He ranked fourth nationally in receptions, second in yards, and tied for third in TD catches.

Bell offers inside-outside flexibility, running 39.1% of his collegiate routes from the slot. He also ranked eighth among qualifying WRs in 2025 with 3.14 yards per route.

At 6'0, 192 pounds with 4.40 speed and a 98th-percentile burst score, Bell blends explosion and polish.

Player Overview

After three quiet seasons as a walk-on, Cameron led the Bears in receptions, receiving yards, and TDs in both 2024 and 2025. He earned All-Big 12 honors as a punt returner in 2024 and as a WR in 2025.

At 6'1 and 223 pounds, Cameron plays with power. He's a legitimate red-zone weapon with strong body control, timing, and ball tracking. His physicality shows up at the catch point. Cameron dropped just one pass among 102 targets last season.

He must improve his releases against NFL press coverage. Right now, he wins more with strength than nuance.

Consider Cameron in the fourth round of rookie drafts as a developmental play.

Player Overview

Coleman's college career was a tour. He opened at Jackson State under Deion Sanders, transferred to Louisville for 2023, then broke out at Mississippi State.

He closed at Missouri in 2025, again leading his team in receptions and receiving yards.

Coleman looks like a slot-only player in the NFL. He logged 92% of his snaps inside in college. That likely limits the fantasy upside, but he plays fast and fearlessly. His 26 missed tackles forced in 2024 ranked fifth nationally.

Much of his production came on manufactured touches and underneath routes that won't be as easy against NFL defenders. He's likely to fall short of starter-level playing time as a pro.

PROS

- Legit speed
- Good double moves
- Early breakout

CONS

- Lazy routes
- Goes down on contact
- Unreliable hands

Player Overview

The Tennessee sprint champion took his first collegiate touch 100 yards for a kick-return TD. As a true freshman, he led Kentucky in catches and receiving yards.

Brown's receiving production dipped when QB Will Levis left, but his special teams value surged. He earned Sporting News All-America honors in 2024 after leading the NCAA with 36.0 yards per kick return and scoring 3 TDs. Brown then paced LSU in catches and yards in 2025.

His burst off the line and ability to track the deep ball make him a vertical threat. The concerns are consistency and size. At 5'11 and 177 pounds with a career 10.3% drop rate, he profiles as volatile.

PROS

- Uber athlete
- Big catch radius
- Good sideline awareness

CONS

- Raw route runner
- Loses too many 50/50 balls
- Spent first three college seasons in FCS

Player Overview

Caldwell is a developmental prospect with rare size (6'5, 216 pounds) and track speed.

His production resume is thin, though. He broke out in his third season at FCS Lindenwood before transferring to Cincinnati, where he managed a modest 32-478-6 line in his lone FBS campaign.

Caldwell projects best as a vertical Z receiver, but his route running, hands, and contested-catch skills remain raw.

He delivered one of the best Combine performances ever, earning a 9.99 Relative Athletic Score.

That athleticism should earn Day 3 interest, but he'll be no more than a late-draft dart throw for dynasty players.

PROS

- Great catch technique
- Excels on deep routes
- Hits full speed quickly

CONS

- Limited route tree
- Won't beat press
- Struggled vs. top DBs

Player Overview

Wallace committed to Duke before landing at Penn State, he played a limited role through 2023. Even as a full-time 2024 starter, he trailed well behind dominant TE Tyler Warren.

Wallace led Ole Miss in catches and yards in 2025. He set a career high in yards per route and matched his best in yards after catch per reception. He proved far more effective against zone coverage, averaging 2.94 yards per route vs. 1.14 against man.

The 6'0, 192-pounder understands leverage and finds soft spots, but he doesn't consistently separate and lacks true vertical speed.

Wallace profiles as a Day 3 NFL pick who's likely to remain a complementary player.

Player Overview

Daniels spent four seasons at Liberty, averaging 18.5 yards per catch and rebounding from an injury-marred 2022 for his best college season.

Daniels dealt with a nagging foot injury in his lone LSU season, ranking fourth on that team in receptions and yards. He climbed to third in each category at Miami in 2025.

Daniels brings NFL size and dependable ball skills. He converted 11 of 17 contested targets in 2025 and shows refined route craft from the slot and perimeter. He lacks top-end speed, though, and isn't a dynamic tackle-breaker.

Daniels looks like a Day 3 NFL pick and no more than a low-ceiling, late-round consideration for rookie drafts.

Player comp: Rod Streater

PROS

- Plus short-area quickness
- Great hands + catch technique

CONS

- Poor route runner
- Tight hips
- Not physical

Player Overview

Virgil caught just two passes across his first two seasons at Miami (Ohio) before earning a starting role in 2024. He earned second-team All-MAC honors that season, before transferring to Texas Tech.

On top of his receiving numbers, Virgil took his only two carries for TDs (and 35 total yards) in 2025.

Virgil brings prototypical boundary size and moves well for his frame. He can slip press coverage and compete in traffic.

His route transitions lack sharpness, however, and he's lean for the pro game. His 1.74 career yards per route is uninspiring, especially considering he spent three years in the MAC.

Virgil looks like a low-ceiling fantasy play.

PROS

- Elite ball tracking
- Stacks DBs to win
- Strong production profile

CONS

- Slow play speed
- Tight hips
- Limited route tree

Player Overview

McAlister presents real upside and real baggage. The three-star recruit chose Boise State over several Power Five programs and flashed early. His development stalled when he stepped away from the team late in his sophomore year, prompting a transfer to TCU.

Off-field issues followed. McAlister was arrested on assault charges, later pleading guilty to a lesser charge and receiving probation. A subsequent bond violation raised further concerns.

McAlister closed his career by ranking seventh nationally in yards and earning first-team All-Big 12 honors.

The key now will be seeing if any team values the talent enough to overlook the off-field issues.

Player Overview

Sadiq emerged as Oregon's starting TE after Terrance Ferguson went 46th overall in the 2025 draft. He proceeded to deliver a 51-560-8 junior season. Strong film and athleticism push his stock into the first round.

Sadiq pairs 4.50 speed with prototypical size, making him a weapon against LBs. He runs a dynamic, NFL-ready route tree. Teams will also value his violent blocking and physicality within routes.

Sadiq dropped six passes in 2025. Most were routine catches he failed to secure. Those concentration drops raise concern but do not erase his upside.

He should step in as an immediate NFL starter. The physical tools give him immediate top-12 fantasy TE potential.

PROS

- Explosive off snap
- Great catch technique
- Excellent ball tracking

CONS

- Gets pushed around
- Poor blocker
- Rounds off routes

Player Overview

Stowers entered college as a four-star QB at Texas A&M before transferring to New Mexico State and switching to TE.

He spent the past two seasons developing at Vanderbilt. He totaled 112 catches for 1,413 yards and 9 TDs. Primarily a slot option, Stowers profiles as a receiving TE in the vein of Oronde Gadsden Jr.

He explodes off the line and moves smoothly through breaks. That quickness helped him uncover consistently and serve as a safety valve for QB Diego Pavia. He brings mismatch potential as a receiver.

His inexperience shows in his route detail and blocking. Still, his growth curve offers long-term fantasy upside.

PROS

- Terrific hands catcher
- Separates easily
- Screen merchant

CONS

- Inconsistent acceleration
- Rarely works back to QB
- Disappears for stretches

Player Overview

Klare spent three seasons at Purdue before transferring to Ohio State. He went 43-448-2 as a safety valve for the 2025 Buckeyes.

Klare fires off the line and creates mismatches with his burst. He threatens defenses up the seam and produces after the catch on screens and quick passes. He rarely drops the ball and may possess a higher ceiling than his college role revealed.

Experience both inline and in the slot strengthens his case as an every-down option.

Klare needs the right situation and steady snaps to matter in fantasy. Day 2 draft capital would give him a path to early playing time.

PROS

- High-level route technique
- Boxes defenders out
- Excellent ball tracking

CONS

- Older prospect
- Concentration drops
- Not overly physical

Player Overview

Trigg entered college as a four-star recruit in 2021 and committed to Lane Kiffin at USC. When Kiffin left for Ole Miss, Trigg followed. He made little impact there and transferred to Baylor in 2024, where he began to produce.

Over the past two seasons, he totaled 70-1,001-8. Trigg wins with physicality off the line and strong ball tracking. He boxes out defenders and uses his frame to create separation. That receiving savvy gives him fantasy upside if he earns a starting role.

For a five-year player, he lacks polish. Trigg loses focus and drops routine passes. Physical LBs can disrupt his routes.

Still, his receiving upside makes him intriguing if he lands in a developmental spot.

Player Overview

Koziol entered college as a two-star recruit at Ball State. He broke out in 2024 with a 94-839-8 line and drew heavy transfer interest. He initially committed to Wisconsin but flipped to Houston and continued producing.

In 2025, Koziol posted 74-727-6 for the Cougars. He uses his massive wingspan to pluck passes outside his frame. He aligns both inline and in the slot to create mismatches. His blocking continues to develop, but he flashes three-down potential.

Koziol ranked top-8 among TEs in yards per route and Pro Football Focus receiving grade in 2025. His size and production make him an intriguing later-round flier in rookie drafts.

CONS

- Not overly athletic
- Won't separate
- Purely inline

Player Overview

Roush spent all four college seasons at Stanford. He capped 2025 with a career-best 49-545-2 line.

Roush profiles as a traditional inline TE. His strengths lie in blocking and red-zone work. That limits his fantasy appeal, but he wins contested catches and uses his frame to break tackles.

He impressed during the offseason process and showed more receiving upside than his college production suggested. He dominated at the Senior Bowl, using his size to win one-on-one reps and score TDs. Then he earned a 9.94 Relative Athletic Score at the Combine.

He projects as a reliable NFL contributor. A blocker-first profile simply lowers his fantasy ceiling.

Player comp: Fred Davis

PROS

- Receiver playing TE
- Physical after catch
- Rarely drops passes

CONS

- Not overly fast
- Loses contested balls
- Poor blocker

Player Overview

Joly entered college as a two-star WR at 190 pounds. He committed to UConn, bulked up to 228, and played a WR/TE hybrid role.

He led the team in receiving as a sophomore, finishing with a 56-578-2 line. A transfer to NC State expanded his role at a higher level. He added weight to reach 251 pounds and totaled 92-1,150-11 over two seasons with the Wolfpack.

Joly plays like a receiver and often aligns in the slot. He runs a diverse route tree and adds physicality after the catch.

Blocking remains the concern. That limitation could reduce early snaps while he develops. If he earns a starting role, his receiving skill set gives him high-upside fantasy appeal.
